Datacom Technology Group (DTG) Provides Complimentary Seminars And Workshops To Ease Entry Into 'The Cloud'

NEW YORK CITY – October 24th, 2011 - Datacom Technology Group (DTG), a full-service IT and financial services staffing firm, announced today it will be offering a series of complimentary seminars and workshops. The series of events will assist lead IT Professionals (CIO, Dir IT) with common architecture, security and governance questions related to making cloud computing strategy decisions.

Recent surveys show that most IT professionals do not have a strategy to adopt standard ITSM processes that align with cloud-based services. Many others are using standards, but do not think the processes are mature enough to effectively manage cloud-based services.

Best practice standards (ITIL, Six Sigma for IT, PMBOK) are especially important for lead IT professionals whose value to current and future employers is their ability to strategically align IT with business goals, in addition to skills in managing people and systems. The need for embracing a standard ITSM approach has been gaining importance as more professionals move selected IT services into the cloud, where best practice methodologies are utilized. "The IT community is quickly coming to realize that understanding and adopting best practices will play a key role in managing the efficiency gains that the cloud promises," said Anthony Juliano, CTO for Landmark Ventures. "Organizations will need to review processes and make adjustments to better align and integrate existing and new services with cloud providers just as the current processes would typically be aligned with in-house services."
